ever Tolerated the errors of Mr. Breckinridge We deny the charge. We spurn the censure It is all a mistake. The notion of the Union won't do. We have heard the notion expresse before, but it is a fallacy, and, if our contem porary will pardon us, n "vulgar" one. Ther is nothing really marvellous in Mr. Breckinridge's success, consisting almost wholly in the achievement of place, as it does, but, if ther were mything marvellons in it, most certainly the faithless and excessive leniency of the "Whig press" would not explain the marvel for, in the first place, the "Whig press" ba been guilty of no such leniency, and, secondly such leniency couldn't have made Mr. Breckinridge the favorite of his party, if the "Whig press" had been recream enough to bestow it on him. The notion is false in fact and fulse in philosophy. It is a shallow misconception. The idea that newspapers manufacture great men is considerably overdone. There is some truth in it, to be sure, but a great deal of fancy nlso. Everything in it which favors the con national popularity for a man of unpopular qualities is fincy. There isn't a particle of truth in it. The thing is ridiculously absurd. Take Mr. Breckinridge, for example. Who believes that all the applanse of all the Whig papers in Kentucky pufling in a gale could have borne him into the favor of his party, if and obscure antecedents, instead of what be is,
